

The Final Countdown – Modern Technology

Part 2

“Well hey, if you guys were here last week, you know that Al’s been having some hard time lately with the law and all, and so he and Candy decided to get away from it all, especially me for some reason, and they decided to go out for the evening. You know, do it up!

So they got all dressed up and phoned for a cab, because Al still didn’t have his driver’s license back yet, but anyway, as they were getting ready to leave, they covered up their parakeet, turned on a night light, and put their cat outside.

And right after that the taxi arrived, so they open up their front door to leave, but all of a sudden their cat scoots back into the house. Well, they don’t want their cat shut in the house because it’s always trying to eat the bird.

So Candy goes out to the taxi while the Al goes back inside to get the cat. But the cat runs upstairs, and Al in hot pursuit.

But meanwhile, Candy doesn’t want the driver to know that the house is going to be empty, so she fibs a little and says that her husband will be out soon, ‘He’s just going upstairs to say goodbye to my mother.’

So a few minutes later Al makes it back to the cab and he hops in and says, ‘Sorry I took so long,’ as the taxi started heading down the street.

And then he continued, “Man, that stupid ol’ hag, she was hiding under the bed. So I had to poke her with a coat hanger just to get her to come out!

Then I had to wrap her in a blanket to keep her from scratching me. But it worked. I hauled her big behind downstairs and threw her out into the back yard!’

That’s right! The driver hit a parked car...and so ended their so-called nice evening!”

Now folks, how many of you guys would say that AI should just stay home, you know what I'm saying? I mean, gee whiz, week after week, it just seems like things just keep getting worse him, doesn't it? But that's right folks, believe it or not, AI is not alone. The Bible says one day the whole planet is going to have days even worse than that one week after week after week and it ain't going to stop at the rapture of the Church! And that's because they just entered the 7-year Tribulation and it ain't no joke! And for those of you who don't know, the 7-year Tribulation and is not a party. It's an outpouring of God's wrath on a wicked and rebellious planet. In fact Jesus said in Matthew 24 it's going to be a "time of greater horror than anything the world has ever seen or will ever see again. And that "unless that time of calamity is shortened, the entire human race will be destroyed." But praise God, God's not only a God of wrath, He's a God of love as well. And because He loves you and I, He's given us many warning signs to show us when the Tribulation was near and Jesus Christ's 2nd Coming was rapidly approaching.

Therefore, in order to keep you and I from experiencing the ultimate bad day of being left behind, having the worst time of our lives week after week after week, we're going to continue in our study The Final Countdown. And so far we've already seen how the #10 sign on The Final Countdown was The Jewish People. And then last time if you were here we saw how the #9 sign was Modern Technology. And there we saw that God lovingly foretold you and I that when we see across the world an Increase of Travel, an Increase of Information, and an Increase of Unrest that this would be a clear indicator from God, you better wake up folks, you're living in the last days.

But that's still not all! The second End Time Prophecy concerning Modern Technology is that There Would Be A Great Increase of Bible Fulfillment. You see folks, this is what's important about this point. For the past 100 years or so people have been mocking Christians and Christianity and saying that nothing ever changes. "You Christians keep saying that the Lord is coming back, real soon, any day now, but nothing ever changes. Why is this time so different? Why should I listen to you now!" Well, that's the importance of understanding what's going on with Modern Technology. For the first time in human history we have the technology to pull off the events that are mentioned in the 7-year Tribulation. Which means for the first time, the stage really is set. Everything really is ready to go. There's nothing technologically holding it back from occurring. That's why you should listen! That's why you should pay attention this time.

So what are these passages being fulfilled with Modern Technology today showing us we really are living in the Last Days? Well, the first Bible passage that's being fulfilled in minute detail thanks to the rise of Modern Technology is The Death of the Two Witnesses. But don't take my word for it. Let's listen to God's.

Revelation 11:1-9 "I was given a reed like a measuring rod and was told, 'Go and measure the temple of God and the altar, and count the worshipers there. But exclude the outer court; do not measure it, because it has been given to the Gentiles. They will trample on the holy city for 42 months. And I will give power to my two witnesses, and they will prophesy for 1,260 days, clothed in sackcloth.'

These are the two olive trees and the two lampstands that stand before the Lord of the earth. If anyone tries to harm them, fire comes from their mouths and devours their enemies. This is how anyone who wants to harm them must die. These men have power to shut up the sky so that it will not rain during the time they are prophesying; and they have power to turn the waters into blood and to strike the earth with every kind of plague as often as they want.

Now when they have finished their testimony, the beast that comes up from the Abyss will attack them, and overpower and kill them. Their bodies will lie in the street of the great city, which is figuratively called Sodom and Egypt, where also their Lord was crucified. For three and a half days men from every people, tribe, language and nation will gaze on their bodies and refuse them burial."

Now folks, once again, you have to take a look at this in its historical setting to understand it's prophetic significance. Imagine what it must have been like when the Apostle John was writing this nearly 2,000 years ago. It must have seemed like an incredible fantasy for the whole planet to simultaneously watch two dead bodies, rejoice over their death, and even send gifts to each other, right? That's what the text says! But guess what? It's not fantasy anymore! Due to the advent of television and global satellite technology, you and I can simultaneously watch anything we want, anywhere we want, around the world, can't we? Which means, this passage is being fulfilled, before our very eyes! We have the technology right now to watch the death of the Two Witnesses for 3½ days for the first time in the history of mankind! This is why you should listen this time! That's why you need to pay attention when people say Jesus is coming back real soon! We have the technology to pull off this passage for the first time ever!

But that's still not all. We not only have the technology to observe the death of the Two Witnesses during the 7-year Tribulation, but we even have the platform to watch their death being built for the very first time. Believe it or not, plans are being made right now to build for the first time in human history, a Global Television Network to broadcast these kinds of events, for a "Global Ruler." And remember, it's a "Global Ruler" called the antichrist that is allowed to overpower the Two Witnesses and kill them. Check this out.

"In an article entitled, 'Global Television for Our Future Global Leader,' UN Watchdog Cliff Kincaid reported, 'Surprise and even shock were among the reactions to my recent column about how elite members of the World Economic Forum (WEF) meeting in Davos, Switzerland, were considering a proposal for a new global television network to usher in a state of ‘global governance.’”

He said the media proposal is to create ‘a new global network’ with ‘the capacity to connect the world, bridging cultures and peoples, and telling us who we are and what we mean to each other.’

He says, ‘Isn’t it nice that we might have a TV network telling us ‘who we are?’ And ‘what we mean to each other?’ Perhaps we will learn that we are global citizens. Perhaps a global leader of some sort will tell us that. Who might that be? Kincaid says this story smacks of George Orwell’s 1984.

Several prominent U.S. media figures signed on to the alarming and controversial proposal that envisions itself to become ‘a genuine, global voice.’

The council declared that it is, ‘Championing a new global, independent news and information service whose role is to inform, educate and improve the state of the world – one that would take advantage of all platforms of content delivery from mobile to satellite and online to create a new global network.’

Kincaid said although he’s no Biblical scholar, he wonders about the end-times implications of such a channel. ‘Clearly they’re talking about this global order, the new world order, global taxes and now global TV put at the service of some kind of global ruler of the world,’ he continues. ‘I don’t know whether that would be the anti-Christ or not.’”

But that’s right! Just in case you miss the up and coming soon to be Global News Broadcast for the death of the Two Witnesses, it just so happens that Google just launched a new program that allows you to get a birds eye view of all place, the streets of Jerusalem, that you can view on your computer or even your cell phone. Here’s the announcement.

“After months of consultations with Israeli security officials, Google has launched its popular Street View service in the country’s three largest cities.

The new Street View provides images of ordinary life, contested areas and religious sites in the Holy Land. Due to security issues, areas around several sensitive sites, such as the military headquarters in Tel Aviv and the prime minister's residence in Jerusalem, are blurred out.

Google Street View is available in more than 30 countries. It was held up in Israel by concerns that images of its streets could be used by terrorists. The Islamic Jihad militant group in Gaza, for instance, has boasted that it used Google Earth, which gives birds-eye views and some street-level pictures of sites around the world, to aim rockets at Israel.

Last August, after a panel of government ministers met for six months to draft security guidelines, Israel announced it had reached an agreement with Google.

The service was quietly launched late last week and officially unveiled Sunday. The images are obtained by specialized cameras mounted on vehicles.

Israel is the first Middle Eastern nation to display its cities and streets online. Iraq's National Museum is also available on Street View.

Pictures online Sunday showed typical street scenes — bicycles chained to the gates of apartment gardens in Tel Aviv, tourists sunbathing on Haifa's beaches, and the crowded cobblestone Via Dolorosa, the path that Jesus is said to have walked before his crucifixion in Jerusalem's Old City.

Tel Aviv Mayor Ron Huldai brushed off security concerns about Tel Aviv, a city that was hit hard by suicide bombings on buses and in restaurants during the Palestinian uprising a decade ago.

He said militants know the city well enough without the Google service. 'Tel Aviv-Jaffa is a target anyway,' Huldai said Sunday.

He noted that other urban military installations, like the Pentagon outside Washington, also was left off Street View.

Despite Google's enthusiasm, not all Israelis were happy.

Retired Lt. Col. Mordechai Kedar, who served for 25 years in Israeli intelligence, said the service would be a boon to militants seeking to attack Israel.

‘They will use it daily,’ Kedar said. ‘Every day Street View is online, it’s causing damage.’

Google Israel’s country manager, Meir Brand, said additional cities will soon join the first three, including Beersheba, Nazareth and Eilat.”

And what did the text say? Their bodies will lie in the street!

Apparently, we’re not going to have any trouble finding out what street that its! Hey folks, maybe it’s just me, but I’m thinking we’re getting pretty close to having a Global Television Network that’s apparently being built for a Global Leader whose going to broadcast the death of the Two Witnesses, who even throws in a Global Google App for your cell phone just to make sure you don’t miss the show, how about you? People, this not by chance! It’s all happening in our lifetime now! Tell me we’re not getting close!

But that’s still not all. What else did the text say? What did these people DO as they were watching this event for 3½ days on their phone or TV? Well, let’s take a look at the text.

Revelation 11:10 “The inhabitants of the earth will gloat over them and will celebrate by sending each other gifts, because these two prophets had tormented those who live on the earth.”

Now again, think about this from the Apostle John’s perspective 2,000 years ago. It must have blown his mind! How could people not only watch the death of two guys from around the world simultaneously, but how in the world are they going to be able to celebrate and send each other gifts around the world in 3½ days? I mean, they didn't even have the Pony Express back then! Well guess what? It's not a surprise anymore! As we already saw previously, we now have, for the first time in man's history a global distribution network! Thanks to this rise of Modern Technology we now have a Global Transportation system that's hooked up to a Global Communications system, that's linked to a Global Supply Chain system, that's overseen by a Global Trade and Commerce system that allows us to go down to our local store and get fresh crabmeat shipped to us from Thailand, or have a thoroughbred horse shipped to you from New Zealand. Or get fresh flowers all the way from South America or have a New York City pizza delivered anywhere in the world, and be able to what? Send a package from Japan in the afternoon and have it arrive in Washington the next morning, which includes a celebratory package sent by someone who's gloating over the death of the Two Witnesses on their phone or TV within 3½ days, for the first time in mankind's history. And that's right! Thanks to the recent advent of the Internet, you don't even have to go to the store anymore. You can just send that celebratory gift with the click of a mouse or even the touch of a finger on your cell phone!

Why should I listen when people who warn me about the soon return of Jesus Christ? Because never before in the history of mankind have we had the technology to pull this off but we do now! That's why we need to listen!

Oh, but that's not all. The second Bible passage that's being fulfilled in minute detail thanks to the rise of Modern Technology is The Deception of the False Prophet.

Revelation 13:11-13 "Then I saw another beast, coming out of the earth. He had two horns like a lamb, but he spoke like a dragon. He exercised all the authority of the first beast on his behalf, and made the earth and its inhabitants worship the first beast, whose fatal wound had been healed. And he performed great and miraculous signs, even causing fire to come down from heaven to earth in full view of men."

Now folks, here we see the classic passage that tells us how the False Prophet is actually going to dupe people, the whole world, into worshipping the antichrist. Okay, and notice what it was. He's going to cause fire to come down from heaven, or in other words, the atmosphere, in full view of men. But it's all going to be a bunch of chicanery. This is what the Apostle Paul says in this passage.

2 Thessalonians 2:9 "The coming of the lawless one will be in accordance with the work of satan displayed in all kinds of counterfeit miracles, signs and wonders."

And so here we see that these so-called miracles, even causing fire to come down from heaven in full view of men, is a counterfeit. In other words, it's a fake; it's a phony; it's manufactured not a true miracle. And so that's the question. Do we see any kind of technology on the planet right now that could help the False Prophet pull off this phony miracle of causing fire to come down from heaven? Uh, yeah! It's called HAARP. And it's not the kind that angels play! Let's check it out.

“It's no coincidence that the United States began building its own mysterious array of antennas in Feb 1992. They are located in Gakona, Alaska. The project is called HAARP. HAARP is the high frequency active aurora research project, originally a joint effort of the air force and navy in cooperation with a number of academic institutions.’

It is today the world's largest radio broadcasting station, but its not designed to broadcast for human ears. It uses unique patented ability to focus the energy coming out of the antennae field and injects that energy into a spot at the top of the atmosphere in a region called the ionosphere.’

HAARP is comprised of a 180 antennas approximately 72' feet tall, linked together to function as one giant steerable antennae. Steerable, because it can aim millions of watts of ELF waves into one tiny patch of the atmosphere.

The amount of the energy we are talking about here is 3.6 million watts. To give you an idea of what that is, the largest legal AM radio station here in America is 50,000 watts. HAARP is 72,000 of these AM stations (50,000 watts each) injecting their entire output into a spot that's 12 miles across by about 2½ miles deep by about 90 miles up.

This is where HAARP is pointing, it's an area located roughly 300 miles from Anchorage. The US military says that HAARP is merely being used to study the physical and electrical properties and behavior of the ionosphere for both civilian and defense purposes. But another theory has surfaced, the intense energy being beamed into the sky by HAARP, actually heating up the atmosphere causing weather changes.

HAARP is being used for weather modification, the military's own record proves it, they've admitted it within their own documents and yet they still deny it to the public. Dr Brooks Agnew has researched the ELF wave technology for the past thirty years and is convinced HAARP's affect on the ionosphere does alter the weather.

HAARP is one of several ELF wave transmitters located all over the globe. The United States owns, and operates three of them. One in Gakona, AK. One in Fairbanks, AK and one in Arecibo, Puerto Rico. Russia has one near Vasilsursk, and the European Union has one near Tromso, Norway.

Working in tandem, these transmitters could potentially alter weather anywhere in the world. Changing the jet streams course entirely. Triggering massive rainstorms or droughts. Even hurricane steering would be possible by heating up the atmosphere and building up high pressure domes that could deflect or change the course of hurricanes.

The US government is firm in its position that HAARP is just an atmospheric research facility, but is it more than coincidence that since going online that some experts have reported strange weather anomalies including massive floods, hurricanes, and earthquakes.

HAARP went online in 1994 and construction continued until 2007. There are reportedly a total of 5 known of ionic heaters including HAARP in the world today. There are possibly 20 other ionospheric heaters in existence all over the world today. There's no conclusive proof that any of them are used as weather weapons, although they do have the ability to manipulate the ionosphere.

And that brings us to something else. In December 2001, scientists at Ames Research Center in Palo Alto CA made a discovery. In studying more than 100 earthquakes with magnitudes of 5.0 or greater, they find that almost all of them are preceded by electrical disturbances in the ionosphere. Could there be a connection to HAARP or a facility like it?

Dr Agnew experienced the power of ELF waves firsthand back in the 1980's. He was hired by an energy company to locate oil and gas using the same kind of ELF waves at much lower frequencies to carry out his search. It's a process called earth tomography. But during one particular incident, Dr Agnew believes his use of HAARP like ELF waves accidentally triggered an earthquake.

‘It was in the spring of 1987, we arrived in Roseburg, OR to use our ELF technology to search for oil and gas. Setting up that day, we had a little bit different results than we expected because the instant that we energized it, there was between a 4 to 4.5 earthquake on the Richter scale earthquake that occurred. We were so amazed about what seemed to be cause and effect. We get to an area that has a high propensity for earthquakes in an area known as a Mega Thrust Fault Line of the Pacific Northwest. We turn it on and an earthquake occurs.’

When HAARP’s broadcast array in Gakona, Alaska sends pulses of ELF waves into the ionosphere, the waves get reflected back down and pass through the earth and the ocean. If 3.6 million watts of ELF waves were purposely or accidentally aimed at an already unstable fault line, it could, according to Dr Agnew, cause a tremendous earthquake.

Conspiracy theorists believe HAARP is responsible for triggering earthquakes in enemy territories like Iran, China, and rogue parts of Afghanistan over the past 3 years.

But HAARP’s startling potential doesn’t end there. Some say, it’s linked to a strange phenomena occurring in our skies, that is, chemtrails. In recent years peculiar cloud formations have been appearing in our skies all over the world, increasing in frequency. I think most of us in North America have wondered at these plumes criss crossing the sky in grid patterns, parallel rows and the now familiar X ‘s. And many of us have wondered what these trails are.

While highly speculative, some researches suggest these strange cloud formations are another agent of weather warfare. They first appear to be simply contrails, coming from high flying jet airplanes. But these trails linger in the sky for many hours. Some even for an entire day. Forming an artificial cloud.

The theory is that chemtrails are being used in conjunction with HAARP. By spraying metal oxides in the air above enemy territory skies, then directing ELF waves to heat those metal oxides. The temperature of the sky is raised to more than 100 degrees Fahrenheit. Preventing the accumulation of water vapor, that would otherwise form clouds and produce rainfall.

The ELF waves that HAARP produces, bounce off the ionosphere and are able to curve around the earth over the horizon to the ground, making any point on the globe well within reach. Imagine the effects of chemtrails on the battlefield, causing extended droughts in enemy countries. Drying up their resources. Forcing surrender.

Just as terrifying, is another form of weather being weaponized. Rain that can trigger devastating floods and wipe cities clean off the map. If you can make it rain. You can have a profound effect on the battlefield. One of the critical elements of launching a weatherized battle is being able to control rain and unleash floods.

In history there is a chilling example of a flood that may have been accidentally triggered by weather weapons. August 15, 1952 near the small town of Lynnmouth, England, a massive rainstorm strikes. The rivers swells. Scores die. It's estimated that 250 times as much rain fell in a period of 24 hours as normally fell in an entire month. The EastLynn and West Lynn Rivers flood their banks. According to the BBC 90 million tons of water sweep down into the town of Lynnmouth, 35 people were killed, bodies wash out to sea and are never found. Trees are uprooted forming dams behind bridges creating walls of water that carry huge boulders into the village destroying shops and hotels and homes.

Was this just a freak act of nature? The prevailing theory is that it may have been a British military experiment gone bad as they have been known conducting cloud seeding tests around that same time. Allegedly, early in the morning on Aug 15th 1952, some witnesses have reported seeing Royal Air Force jets flying in the area. At times, disappearing from sight, flying high above the cloud bank. Were they on a routine training mission or as some people speculate, were they dumping payloads of silver iodide into the clouds. Silver Iodide is one of the most common chemicals used for cloud seeding. It forces the tiny ice crystal that make up the cloud to fuse together. Once enough tiny ice crystals fuse together they become heavy and fall to the earth in the form of rain. And on that fateful day in August 1952, rain fell in record amounts. Did the Royal Air Force embark on daring cloud seeding experiments without public knowledge?

Some people reported seeing aircraft undertaking strange manuvuers and it subsequently emerged that there was an experiment codenamed 'Operation Cumulus which was indeed an attempt at weather modification.

Interestingly, many of the documents relating to Operation Cumulus, have disappeared and are not available from the National Archives.

A little over a decade later, the U.S. military conducted experiments to bring weather to the battlefield. In October 1966, the Vietnam war was in full swing. U.S. military scientists were devising a way to slow down enemy forces using the weather. The US employed a ground breaking military directive called Project Popeye. Project Popeye was a weather modification program that involved cloud seeding, and the idea behind that was to produce or exaggerate the monsoon rains that are traditional in that region.

Experiments were carried out beforehand with the military aircraft dropping silver iodide crystals in clouds over the Laos panhandle in the SeKong River Valley. Fifty cloud seeding runs were conducted. 82% of the clouds seeded produced rain within a brief period of time.

The goal of Operation Popeye was to extend the monsoon season and create an inordinate amount of rainfall by seeding clouds over the Ho Chi Min Trail. The Ho Chi Min Trail was a primary supply route by which the North Vietnamese army really supplied its troops by operating combat forces in South Vietnam as well as supplying the VietCong. So it was the most significant logistical center of gravity to the North Vietnamese and it was an important objective for the United States and our allies of Vietnam to try to interrupt that supply line to cut off those supplies to the enemies.

Operation Popeye's objectives are to soften road surfaces on the Ho Chi Min Trail, cause landslides along roadways and wash out river crossings. The military had their own catch phrase as a result of this program and it was make mud not war. They flew over 2,600 missions from a period of 1966 to 1972 and it is believed that it did exacerbate the amount of rainfall and probably extended the monsoon season by 30-45 days.

Operation Popeye showed that weather can be brought to the battlefield as rain. But can it be weaponized in the form of a hurricane? Some say it already has. On August 23rd 2005, the National Weather service is tracking an unassuming storm forming over the Bahamas. A storm this size rarely damages building or takes lives, in fact at this point it's simply known as Tropical Depression 12. But that will change. It will unexpectedly grow into the mother of all storms. A category 5 hurricane, with winds up to 175mph. Its name: Hurricane Katrina.

When Katrina slams into the Gulf Coast of the United States, it will become one of the deadliest disasters in U.S. History. Costing 81 billion dollars in property damage and claiming more than 1,800 lives. Like other hurricanes of that era Katrina showed some very peculiar movements never before seen in a major hurricane. During the 2005 hurricane season were some very strange and amazing anomalies that should not have happened. One of the things that many of the hurricane tracts were almost straight lines, and hurricanes don't go in straight lines.

Some people believe that Katrina hit where it hit, with the power that it struck, because of Russian or Chinese weather control experiments. Just before coming onshore Katrina did an abrupt 90 degree turn hard left and went down the beach for a substantial ways before coming onshore. So we have speculations that our enemies have been throwing hurricanes at us. We were being 'bombarded, attacked' with the weather. To direct and control a hurricane gives you power at least equivalent to nuclear weapons. A hurricane could be an ultimate weapon of war.

The very next year after Katrina something strange happened. According to the National Weather Service not a single hurricane made landfall in 2006. Could the U.S. military be using HAARP to fend hurricane attacks? In a regular high pressure zone above the Southeastern United States points to this conclusion according to Jerry Smith. This High pressure dome has never existed before, its never been seen to have a high pressure dome parked over the southeastern United States within the entirety of a hurricane season. It's NEVER happened before. And it's happened 3 years in a row now.

This high pressure dome worked like the rubber bumpers on a pinball machine and every hurricane like a pinball hit it and bounced off safely going back out to sea. The date coincidence of HAARP being completed and this buffer being in effect I think is very telling.

Today, nations still deny weaponizing weather, but there are suggestions to the contrary. The US Airforce Report 'Weather as a Force Multiplier: Owning the Weather in 2025' outlines the military's desire to exploit and manipulate the weather for the purpose of war by 2025. According to one of the most harrowing lines in the report quote. 'Weather modification is a force multiplier with tremendous power that could be exploited across the full spectrum of war fighting and environments' end quote.

The 2025 report on the weather was essentially a military analysis of ‘what could we do’. Whether it was to create rainfall, create drought conditions, the idea was by 2025 we would be able to manipulate virtually every aspect of weather. The rationale for this is really the ultimate war is if you never have to fire a round and nobody ever knew who launched the fight and this is what weather warfare offers militaries around the world.

With the deadline of 2025 quickly approaching the future of weather warfare is cause for concern. The worst case scenario is that satellite based weapons systems will turn the earths weather on its head. It could rain in the desert and have a heat wave in the Artic. If an enemy could change the jet stream over in North America it could plunge North America into an ice age

Fifty years from now geophysical manipulation of the planet could be the weapon of war. Where its not bombs and bullets its earthquakes, its tidal waves manipulation of weather systems. Those become the future of warfare. When we talk about weather warfare we are talking about death technology. This has nothing to do with enhancing life. The aim of weather warfare is catastrophic environmental destruction and horrific loss of life.

In the future he who can control the weather will probably control the earth.”

Now wait a second, we have the technology in different places around the world to control the weather or even make an earthquake? Uh yeah. It would appear so. It’s called HAARP. In fact, one thing they left out was that this same technology could be used to create a type of death ray that could be beamed over the atmosphere and then down anywhere on the planet to an intended target.

“Plasma physicist Bernard Eastlund explains that it is possible for a HAARP beam to take a part of the atmosphere and push it up further.

Earth Tomographer Brooks Agnew says that they are not paying attention to the ionosphere while it is being held 80 miles out into space by this high energy beam. He says during that time the ionosphere is heating up and creating energy that can discharge back down the radio beam and strike the earth with 100 times the energy released from a thunderbolt.

He further explains that once a 'solar tap' is formed, and the ionosphere actually discharges, the electrons and energy will come from all over the ionosphere and will strike the ground in a bolt which is a hundred times greater than any lightning bolt imaginable, and it will not strike one time, but rather 30-40 times per second until there is no longer any energy to flow from the ionosphere through that tap.

Also when it strikes the ground it will vaporize the ground, water, or whatever it happens to hit, like three or four Mt. Saint Helens Volcanoes going off each second that the bolt discharges.”

And so if you put all this together with our passage, imagine the level of deception and chicanery of the False Prophet, what he has to work with at his fingertips. If you don't worship the antichrist like I tell you to, I'll cause a hurricane to take out your country. I'll cause an earthquake to really mess you up. And if that doesn't work, and I quote, "I'll cause fire to come down from heaven, i.e. I'll send a death ray with HAARP to take you out! Only I won't tell you it's HAARP!" The whole time it's phony, it's a counterfeit, exactly like the Bible said would happen, in the Last Days, during the 7-year Tribulation.

But that's not all. There's one other interesting side-affect of this new HAARP technology. It also has the strange ability to send a beam down that can adversely affect the human brain. Check this out.

“Jean Manning is a journalist who stumbled into a strange world when she started asking questions about alternative energy sources and heard the story of an early 20th century inventor named Nicholas Tesla. Tesla is almost a cult hero, and an overlooked genius, and he has so many inventions that are at the basis of technologies that we have today.

Tesla talked about this Tesla shield around the planet and talked about particle beam weaponry, something called the death ray. Death ray? Jean wasn't sure where all this was leading until “Mr. X” called again. And he said, “The maniacs are actually going to do it, up in Alaska.”

Zap incoming missiles, disrupted global communications and engineer the weather and ready? There's one more. Some people believe the technology being tested here could be used for sinister projects involving humans. Radio waves messing around with people's brain waves.

The human mind is subject to being affected by radio frequency energy and that's what this device is. In other words you can move the moods of large populations using this kind of technology.

Scientists have been experimenting with radio frequencies on animal's brains for decades and the military has followed it all very closely. Especially, once it found that the Russians were on to it.

It was all kept a deep dark secret by the 2 superpowers. Back in the 60's the Soviets began zapping the American Embassy in Moscow with a low frequency beam. No one knows for sure what they were up to but one theory is that they were trying to mess with people's central nervous systems and one report did say the diplomats got depressed a lot.

And HEY! Just think of all the nifty applications against the enemy. Why blow people up when you can drive them crazy. From documents dating back into the early 80's we see that military had discussed the possibilities of mind control through radio-frequency energy.

A 1982 Air Force report called Radio Frequency Energy- A major new research initiative and said that our “RF” energy can “disrupt normal purposeful behavior.” A 1987 military report called for more research on RF energy as a nonlethal weapon pointing out that most of the existing technology is classified and sure enough in 1993 there was a big conference at Johns Hopkins University. Here, the entire conference was classified but the agenda wasn't and weapons using extremely low radio frequency or ELF were listed as "a very attractive option."

Is it just a coincidence that there's been all of this talk and that HAARP will be experimenting with this, is that all just coincidence?

ELF waves produced from HAARP, when targeted on selected areas, can weather-engineer and create mood changes affecting millions of people. The United States is bathed in this magnetic field, so everyone can be affected and mind-controlled. The entire artificial ground wave spreads out over the whole of the USA like a web.

In 1963, Dr. Robert Beck explored effects of external magnetic fields on brainwaves showing a relationship between psychiatric admissions and solar magnetic storms. He exposed volunteers to pulsed magnetic fields similar to magnetic storms, and found a similar response. US 60 Hz electric power ELF waves vibrate at the same frequency as the human brain. UK 50 Hz electricity emissions depress the thyroid gland.

Dr. Andrija Puharich experimented discovering that...

- A. 7.83 Hz (earth's pulse rate) made a person feel good, producing an altered-state.
- B. 10.80 Hz causes riotous behavior
- C. 6.6 Hz causes depression.

The question is could they-would they? We believe they can and we believe they will. It happens to be in Alaska. It happens to be now."

Hmmm. So why would you want a technology to alter the human brain to make them feel agitated or put into a state of euphoria? Well, if you couple this with another new technology called, "The Voice of God Weapon" or "Sonic Projector" that's put out by DARPA or Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, and you got some serious deception going on. This is a weapon that can actually beam a sound of someone speaking into a microphone at your head without you seeing or hearing where it came from and it actually sounds like the voice is coming from inside your head. Here, check it out for yourself.

“Imagine a weapon that creates sound that only you can hear. Science fiction? No, this is one area that has a very solid basis in reality. The Air Force has experimented with microwaves that create sounds in people’s head (which they’ve called a possible psychological warfare tool), and American Technologies can ‘beam’ sounds to specific targets with their patented HyperSound (and yes, I’ve heard/seen them demonstrate the speakers, and they are shockingly effective).

Now the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency is jumping on the bandwagon with their new ‘Sonic Projector’ program. The goal of the Sonic Projector program is to provide Special Forces with a method of surreptitious audio communication at distances over 1 km.

Here’s the question of the day: if the military were to beam voices into somebody’s head, what would they say?’

And check out what this article said:

‘Lightning guns, heat rays, weapons that can make you hear the voice of God. This is what happens when the war on terror meets the entrepreneurial spirit.

‘This is very clandestine,’ Pete Bitar whispered, as his red Dodge Caravan idled in the parking lot of a Burger King near Fort Belvoir. ‘They called last week, and they wanted delivery this week.’

It did feel a little clandestine, if a bit unlikely. Yet there, in the Burger King parking lot, a small transaction in America’s war on terror was about to take place. In the minivan were Bitar, the president and founder of Xtreme Alternative Defense Systems (XADS), Edward Fry, the company’s research coordinator, and George Gibbs, of Marine Corps Systems Command, who two years ago plucked Bitar's obscure company out of its paper existence and provided it with more than half a million dollars in Pentagon funding.

Bitar had battled start-up disappointments and even ridicule – not to mention January cold and Beltway rush-hour traffic – to seal his first Pentagon deal. The procurement order had gone through so quickly that the Indiana-based Bitar, who was in town for a conference, agreed to make his final delivery at the Burger King to avoid the hassle of getting onto the Virginia Army base. Bitar flipped open a case containing his first sale: the 'dazzler,' one in a line of about a half-dozen 'nonlethal' weapons that XADS is marketing to the military. It looked like an executive pen: slick, green and flecked with gold. But the pen was really a green laser designed to disorient and temporarily blind an enemy. Sale price: $1,100 apiece.

Supercharged versions of commercial laser pointers, dazzlers are the lowest-tech of Bitar's weapons, and they're not what initially caught the Pentagon's eye. Rather, it was his concept for a gun that could shoot bolts of artificial lightning to paralyze, but not kill, an enemy, like a 'Star Trek' phaser set on stun. Bitar learned that the Pentagon was seeking ideas for a taser gun. It was like being struck by lightning. He dusted off his decade-old idea and, in 2002, was granted a contract to develop his lightning gun.

Gibbs, the Marine Corps official who first funded Bitar, has a fondness for edgy ideas. A chemical engineer and longtime proponent of nonlethal weaponry, Gibbs funds other offbeat projects, such as Medusa, an attempt to develop a weapon that uses low-power microwaves – believed to cause an audible buzzing in subjects' heads – to make people think God is speaking to them. Another such weapon would use beams of energy to make people dizzy and lose their balance.

But ideas are what Bitar overflows with. His latest is to use ultrasonic waves in the dazzler not to just blind enemies, but also to convey messages into their heads, similar to Gibbs's Medusa project. Hearing voices from God is a 'big thing' in Arab culture, according to Bitar. 'We flash-blind them. And, while their eyes are shut, you could send a recorded message or deep guttural voice that echoes in the inside of their head. They're looking around, 'Hey, did you hear that?''

Bitar laughed. 'That's the psych warfare side of this thing.'

XADS had also added a new acoustic weapon called Screech, which true to its name emits an ear-piercing shriek designed to disperse crowds and cause headaches, Bitar said.

Bitar's technology is based on a technique pioneered more than 100 years ago by the eccentric Serbian inventor Nikola Tesla. The StunStrike uses an electrical charge to break down the air in front of the weapon to create a path for sparks generated by a 'resonant transformer,' better known as a Tesla coil. Unlike a typical Tesla coil, however, Bitar's invention uses electronics to tune and direct the spark stream.

'We can tune it all the way down so it feels like broom bristles, and all the way up to knock you down,' Bitar informed a group of gawkers.

But Bitar noticed that foreign militaries were the most interested in his weapons, and officials from Asia, the Middle East and Europe had all visited his booth. 'It's kind of weird, especially because when it comes to weapons, you'd rather arm your own country than someone else,' he said.

But he shrugged and added, 'A customer is a customer.'

And finally, put all this together with what this article revealed:

'No one ever notices what's going on at a Radio Shack. Outside a lonely branch of the electronics store, on a government-issue San Diego day in a strip mall where no one is noticing much of anything, a bluff man with thinning, ginger hair and preternaturally white teeth is standing on the pavement, slowly waving a square metal plate toward people strolling in the distance. "Watch that lady over there," he says, unable to conceal his boyish pride for the gadget in his giant hand. "This is really cool."

Woody Norris aims the silvery plate at his quarry. A burly brunette 200 feet away stops dead in her tracks and peers around, befuddled. She has walked straight into the noise of a Brazilian rain forest – then out again. Even in her shopping reverie, here among the haircutters and storefront tax-preparers and dubious Middle Eastern bistros, her senses inform her that she has just stepped through a discrete column of sound, a sharply demarcated beam of unexpected sound. "Look at that," Norris mutters, chuckling as the lady turns around. "She doesn't know what hit her."

Norris is demonstrating something called HyperSonic Sound (HSS). The aluminum plate is connected to a CD player and an odd amplifier – actually, a very odd and very new amplifier – that directs sound much as a laser beam directs light. Over the past few years, mainly in secret, he has shown the device to more than 300 major companies, and it has slackened a lot of jaws.

As Norris continues to baffle shoppers by sniping at them with the noises he has on this CD (ice cubes clanking into a glass, a Handel concerto, the plash of a waterfall), some are spooked, and some are drawn in. Two teenage girls drift over from 100 feet away and ask, in bizarre Diane Arbus-type unison, “What is that?”

Norris responds with his affable mantra – “In’nat cool?” – before going into a bit of simplified detail: how the sound waves are actually made audible not at the surface of the metal plate but at the listener’s ears. He doesn’t bother to torment the girls with the scientific gymnastics of how data are being converted to ultrasound then back again to human-accessible frequencies along a confined column of air.

“See, the way your brain perceives it, the sound is being created right here,” Norris explains to the Arbus girls, lifting a palm to the side of his head. “That’s why it’s so clear. Feels like it’s inside your skull, doesn’t it?”

In the years Norris has demonstrated HSS, he says, that’s been the universal reaction: the sound is inside my head. So that’s the way he has started to describe it.

Just to check the distances, I pace out a hundred yards and see if the thing is really working. Norris pelts me with the Handel and, to illustrate the directionality of the beam, subtly turns the plate side to side. And the sound is inside my head, roving between my ears in accord with each of Norris’s turns.

The applications of directional sound go quite a bit beyond messing with people at strip malls, important as this work may be. Norris is enthusiastic about all of the possibilities he can propose and the ones he can’t.

Imagine, he says, walking by a soda machine (say, one of the five million in Japan that will soon employ HSS), triggering a proximity detector, then hearing what you alone hear – the plink of ice cubes and the invocation, “Wouldn’t a Coke taste great right about now?”

Or riding in the family car, as the kids blast Eminem in the back seat while you and the wife play Tony Bennett up front. Or living in a city where ambulance sirens don’t wake the entire neighborhood at 4 a.m. Or hearing different and extremely targeted messages in every single aisle of a grocery store – for instance, near the fresh produce, “Hey, it’s the heart of kiwi season!”

A sampling of the companies that are in active talks with A.T.C. includes Wal-Mart, McDonald’s, Dolby Laboratories, both Coca-Cola and Pepsi, major TV networks and film studios, cellphone makers and museums all over the world, to say nothing of the world’s big-ticket speaker manufacturers.

The U.S.S. Carl Vinson and the U.S.S. Winston S. Churchill are now equipped with A.T.C. speakers, and the Navy has expressed interest in outfitting every carrier in the fleet.

“The L.A.P.D. wants to try it on high-crime alleys,” Norris says. “The Army might use HSS for decoy troop movements. And Disney is nuts about it!”

Even Florida Power and Light has been given a taste. It seems endangered canaries have been sparking themselves to death on power lines and could do with some warning.

Not surprisingly, people who’ve heard of HSS have responded variously. On any given day, Norris might receive 17 e-mail messages from a company in Hong Kong begging to manufacture HSS – and several from civilians who think he’s either a genius or a psychopath. One man recently wrote to insist that Norris “be jailed” if he fields this product (curiously, sending this demand to Norris). And a woman wants to secretly install HSS in her lover’s car or golf bag so that she may continually transmit a message deep into his head: Marry Donna...Marry Donna.

Scientists at NASA once got wind of an offhand remark he had made about wireless receivers and flew him to Texas; they’d been having trouble with boom microphones slipping around inside space helmets. “Suddenly I hear these words coming out of my mouth,” Norris recalls: “ ‘Well, I can give you a one-piece system so you won’t need a boom mike at all. The sound can come through the bones in your head!’ And the NASA guys were, like, ‘Yeah. Right.’ “ Thirty days later, Norris had a prototype, which the space agency grabbed with both hands. Norris translated the concept into an “all-in-your-ear headset” that came to be called Jabra.

In reality, HIDA is both warning and weapon. If used from a battleship, it can ward off stray crafts at 500 yards with a pinpointed verbal warning. Should the offending vessel continue to within 200 yards, the stern warnings are replaced by 120-decibel sounds that are as physically disabling as shrapnel. Certain noises, projected at the right pitch, can incapacitate even a stone-deaf terrorist; the bones in your head are brutalized by a tone’s full effect whether you’re clutching the sides of your skull in agony or not. “Besides,” Norris says, laughing darkly, “grabbing your ears is as good as a pair of handcuffs.”

Most of the sounds under military consideration are classified, but some are approved for public consumption. One truly harrowing noise is that of a baby crying, played backward, and combined with another tone.

‘HIDA can instantaneously cause loss of equilibrium, vomiting, migraines – really, we can pretty much pick our ailment,’ he says brightly.

Norris prods his assistant to locate the baby noise on a laptop, then aims the device at me. At first, the noise is dreadful – just primally wrong – but not unbearable. I repeatedly tell Norris to crank it up (trying to approximate battle-strength volume, without the nausea), until the noise isn’t so much a noise as an assault on my nervous system. I nearly fall down and, for some reason, my eyes hurt. When I bravely ask how high they’d turned the dial, Norris laughs uproariously. “That was nothing!” he bellows. “That was about 1 percent of what an enemy would get. One percent!” Two hours later, I can still feel the ache in the back of my head.

So unlike sound that travels on radio waves and has to be converted by your stereo’s receiver, you simply need to be standing in the path of an HSS beam in order to hear the sound.”

And so if you put all this together, HAARP and the Voice of God weapon and other internal sound devices and it just so happens you have precise the instruments the Occult believes are needed for the ultimate deception in the Last Days to get people around the world to worship and receive the antichrist. Here's what they are waiting for.

“The occult believes that once all the world's religions come together, (and they're expecting it soon) a religious leader will be chosen to be earth's religious spokesman and this spokesperson will then encourage all the people of the world to accept a new world leader, who will suddenly appear on the scene.

And interestingly enough, the occult is in agreement that none of this can fully take place until the people who will never go along with this One World Religion are out of the way. Can anyone guess who that might be? That's right! Christians!

In fact, they say that these people who are restraining or holding things up won't necessarily die, but will somehow mysteriously disappear, or in their words, ‘Elect to leave this dimension as if going to another room.’”

Hey, that sounds like the rapture of the Church, doesn't it?

“And they believe once these people leave this earth, the occult says the new world leader will take his rightful place over the world. And then, and only then, will it be possible to build a combination Temple-Church-Mosque in Jerusalem, which will then finally break the Middle East log jam, which just so happens to sound like what the antichrist is going to do with Israel by signing a peace treaty that starts the actual 7-year Tribulation.

But they also believe that just minutes before the antichrist arises, some supernatural sound will be heard and spiritually felt by everybody on the planet simultaneously. At no other moment in world history will so many people be impacted at once. This action is designed to get everyone looking around as to what caused this sound.”

In fact, it just happens there's a recent flood of reports all over the world of people are saying how they're hearing all kinds of strange sounds from the sky as this man shares:

“We have all heard about the strange sounds being heard around the world. The best that anyone can figure is they started about mid 2011 and have escalated since the beginning of 2012.

They are being reported in virtually every part of the globe, Canada, Asia, Europe, Central and South America and the USA. They are being reported as loud rumblings, tornado like, groaning, low pitch roar, rushing air or water, scraping of metal, loud freight train, trumpets, deep vibrations, they last for one or two minutes or they can go on for days. While most are a low type rumble some are a loud bang or a series of loud booms that last for minutes or hours.

Some have actually called it a ‘skyquake’. They have reportedly set off car alarms, freaked out dogs, cats, farm animals and they certainly have made mainstream media news reports. Some say it is coming from the sky while others claim it's coming from the earth. It seems that almost everyone rules out a mechanical sound such as planes, trains or helicopters.

Speculation is running rampant, things people have put forward, Pole Shift, Atmospheric anomalies, the start of UFO Disclosure, HAARP (High Frequency Active Aurora Research Program), Government diversion to divert attention, End Times fast approaching, etc.

The quantity of the reports is overwhelming, the reasons given for these strange noise runs the gamut from plausible to bizarre and the truth is no one really knows what is actually causing this phenomena. If you speak with those that have heard these strange sounds there is no doubt in your mind that they are real. Until the mystery is solved we can only sit back and listen!”

Could this be the False Prophet's practice run?

“Then with everyone’s attention aroused, images of antichrist will appear simultaneously over the entire earth speaking to mankind, each in his own language. The “sign and wonders” will have begun.

Here the antichrist will appear as a man to a man and a woman to a woman. He will appear as a white to a white, as a black to a black, as an Indian to an Indian, etc. It makes no difference whether you are viewing him in person or on Television. Thus, “He will show that he is all things to all people”

But hey, we don’t have the technology to create a massive vision in the sky to dupe people do we? Uh, yeah. In fact, it just so happens some pretty massive ones have recently appeared in China.

“ITN, a broadcast network in Britain, posted video last week of a stunning mirage in East China that features a city skyline, replete with what appear to be buildings and trees, but in fact, the images were just an elaborate optical illusion.

The amazing mirage appeared over Huanshan City East China at dusk on Thursday. Following a heavy downpour, the spectacular images of mountains, buildings, and trees appeared in the thin mist above the Xin’an River.

The phenomenon began about 5:00pm local time to the amazement of passersby. One lady who witnessed the event stated, ‘It’s really amazing. It looks like a scene in a movie, in a fairy land.’

This is not the first time mirages like this have been reported in China. In 2006, China Daily, an English language newspaper, posted four images of what it said were mirages off the coast of Eastern China’s Shandong province.

Although residents say that similar sites have been seen lately, most agreed that this one had been the most spectacular.”

You talk about deception! What did the text say? In the Last Days the False Prophet is going to use false signs and wonders, and counterfeit miracles, to dupe the world into worshipping the antichrist. Why should I listen when people warn me about the soon return of Jesus Christ? Because never before in the history of mankind have we had the technology to pull this off until now! That's why we need to listen!

Oh, but that's still not all. The third Bible passage that's being fulfilled in minute detail thanks to the rise of Modern Technology is The Death and Demands of the Antichrist.

Revelation 13:14-15 "Because of the signs he was given power to do on behalf of the first beast, he deceived the inhabitants of the earth. He ordered them to set up an image in honor of the beast who was wounded by the sword and yet lived. He was given power to give breath to the image of the first beast, so that it could speak and cause all who refused to worship the image to be killed."

Now folks, here we see rest the infamous passage concerning the False Prophet and the antichrist and it tells us the ultimate goal of the False Prophet's deception. And that's to get people to what? To worship the antichrist or to be killed, right? But that's not all. At some point, the antichrist is going to die or "appear" to die, because remember, his tactics as we already saw are characterized by counterfeit signs, wonders, and miracles, he's a liar and deceiver. And so after this death or "alleged" death the False Prophet is going to set up an image or likeness of the antichrist that can actually speak and cause all who refuse to worship it, the antichrist, to die!

And so that's the question. Do we see any kind of technology on the planet that could help fake the death of the antichrist and create some sort of life-like talking image that can interact with people, even causing their death? Uh, yeah! In fact, it's a combination of several new technologies put together that have arisen on the planet, for the first time in man's history, that can now pull it off. And the first new technology that makes it all possible is 3-D Holograms. Folks, we now have the ability to broadcast a life-like 3-D images of anyone anywhere on the planet. In fact, they're getting so commonplace now that they're even use them in news broadcasts. Check it out these various examples of hologram technology being used today.

“Holy holograms, was that Princess Leia on CNN during election night? No, it was just Jessica Yellin, a CNN correspondent. CNN beamed her image from Chicago to the CNN press center in New York City, where Wolf Blitzer and the rest of the team were covering election returns.

Yellin, who claimed she was the first person to be beamed in a ‘hologram’ on live TV, explained for the audience how this was done. She said she was standing in a tent outside of the Obama headquarters in Chicago where the CNN crew had set up 35 high-definition cameras in a ring. She stood in the center of this ring and the cameras picked up her every movement and transmitted the image in 3D to the studio in New York.

At one point during his interview with Yellin, Blitzer commented that he felt bringing Yellin into the studio via hologram created a more intimate setting for their interview.

Whatever technique CNN used, there's no doubt that it looked it cool. And it conjured up some futuristic thoughts of Star Trek and Star Wars.

Telstra, the Australian phone company, used a hologram earlier this year to beam its chief technology officer from Melbourne to a business meeting about 460 miles away in Adelaide. Cisco Systems has also used holograms in demonstrations to talk about its telepresence products.”

“Environmental enthusiast Prince Charles has delivered a speech to a green energy conference in Abu Dhabi – as a hologram. He may not be known as the most modern of men, but the Prince of Wales’ concern for the planet has catapulted him straight into the 21st Century.

He was keen to prove his green credentials by noting that if he had chosen to appear in person, his long-haul flight would have emitted around 15 tons of carbon dioxide, the greenhouse gas which is causing global warming.

So he appeared as a hologram to congratulate Abu Dhabi for its plans to harness the power of natural resources to create a new zero carbon city called Masdar.

As the 3D image vanished, he left the audience with the words: ‘I am now going to vanish into thin air, leaving not a carbon footprint behind!’

The speech by the 3D version of Charles was recorded in person at Highgrove last year, using technology from British multimedia firm Musion.

Prince Charles is not the first famous figure to use the technology.

David Beckham recorded a message in LA, appearing as a hologram in London. Richard Branson has also given virtual speeches, as did Al Gore during his Live Earth concerts last year.

But the most exciting thing is that those behind the technology have already tried out a live hologram – in other words, they have the technology to make people appear as a hologram in real time from anywhere in the world.

Mr O’Connell said: ‘There has been one successful test which carried a full High Definition signal 11,000 miles from San Jose in America to Bangalore in India. The hologram that appeared was very similar to the one of Prince Charles, but it could interact with the crowd and the people on stage via special screens. I think that is the future for this technology.”

“Tupac Shakur (who died in 1996) appeared in concert at the Coachella music festival Sunday night, wowing audiences who watched his image rap with Snoop Dogg.

And now, the Wall Street Journal is reporting (with the puntastic headline “Rapper’s De-Light”) that the late rapper, despite having died in a shooting 15 years ago, may be going on tour.

The team pulled together Tupac’s performance by looking at old footage and creating an animation that incorporated characteristics of the late singer’s movements.

AV Concepts president Nick Smith told the Journal that the company had used the technology to digitally resurrect some deceased executives – though he gave no details on that.

Over at MTV, writer Gil Kaufmann questioned whether the success of the virtual Tupac would set a trend, particularly for performances including multiple artists. The potential for a surprise appearance from a beloved celebrity performer could be a draw for audiences.”

What? You mean to tell me we have the technology to beam an image of a person, even a dead person, or world leader that’s not even live? Wouldn’t that come in handy for the death or “alleged” death of the antichrist?

But that’s not all. We can not only have a 3-D image of someone interacting with us anywhere on the planet, but now people are starting to interact with these images themselves, almost in a state of worship it, like with this Japanese Anime character.

“Everyone gets a little obsessed with famous musicians now and then, but things get really weird when the famous musician is actually just a piece of software. Hatsune Miku is a rising star in Japan and abroad, singing catchy J-pop that matches her blue-green hair. She’s also a virtual avatar created by Crypton Media using Yamaha’s Vocaloid voice synthesizer.

That hasn’t stopped her from amassing a legion of fans who really love her work. I mean really love it. Check out the crowd frantically waving glow-sticks and singing along with Hatsune Miku as she appears via a ‘3D hologram’ on stage in the videos below. Thanks to Klas Klazon for pointing us to these awesome HD clips of her work.

The performances are from the recently released Blu-Ray/DVD collection of Hatsune Miku’s latest sold out concert in Japan: 39 Giving Day. This girl, er...program?, can really rock.

If you want to know more about Crypton’s Hatsune Miku and similar Vocaloid based characters check out my earlier coverage. I’m not sure I’m a big fan of ‘her’ music, but Hatsune Miku certainly has star talent.

In these HD clips you can really see how eager the fans are, and how well they know her music. The mid-range shots of the crowd with Miku in the background also show how great her ‘hologram’ appears live on stage.

The high definition quality only goes to show that Hatsune Miku, and other virtual rockers on the rise, can hold their own against their real-world counterparts. Who knows, maybe these software singers will grow to dominate the world of music. After all, human pop stars already seem like they were created in a science lab, why not just take the next step?”

Now folks, that’s not only freaky, but you supplant that character with the antichrist’s image and it sure looks like people are ready to do what he says worship me and my image! Is that freaky or what? But that’s still not all. You can now carry on an intelligent conversation with this image and even touch it for some serious interaction! Check this out!

“Lionhead Studios showed a video demonstrating a virtual child called Milo. Able to recognize facial expressions and vocal emotions, Milo chatted with real-life demonstrator Claire.

Milo also threw her a pair of goggles (which she automatically grabbed for and then ‘put on’). Later, Milo grabbed a piece of paper that Claire held in front of the camera for a mere instant. Another aspect saw Claire splashing around virtual water in real-time.

Studio founder Peter Molyneux boasted that these were concepts even science fiction writers haven’t been able to dream up, and that the technology is here, now

Now it was finally my turn, and luckily I got a chance to experience the best part – direct speech with Milo. Molyneux asked me to say my name clearly in front of the screen and then take a step back. I did both and then when Peter asked me to take a step forward and I did, Milo immediately recognized me – ‘Oh, Hello Jeremy!’ Milo said before hopping out of his swing and walking up to greet me. Next he quipped, ‘I see you’re wearing blue today,’ in reaction to the blue shirt that I had on. I could hear the sound of impressed acknowledgments from the people standing behind me right afterwards.

‘Say something funny and see how he reacts,’ Molyneux said, but under the pressure of suddenly saying something witty I choked up and said something about Milo’s shirt being nice and that the drawing on it kind of looked like a backwards Yoda. Yeah, I know, not funny at all, but what was cool is that Milo recognized this and had a bit of a grimace on his face before turning his attention elsewhere.

And with that we were out of time. Even so, the potential for this game and how you could ultimately interact with the character is very high, and I’m excited to see where it goes next.”

Can you say, “touchable” hologram?

“Researchers at Tokyo University have come up with a technology that is a first and significant step away from the mouse and keyboard – touchable holograms.

Up until now, holography has been for the eyes only, and if you'd try to touch it, your hand would go right through. But now we have a technology that also adds the sensation of touch to holograms.

The technology consists of software that uses ultrasonic waves to create pressure on the hand of a user 'touching the projected hologram.

Researchers are using two Wiimotes from Nintendo's Wii gaming system to track a user's hand.

The technology was introduced at SIGGRAPH, an annual computer graphics conference, and has so far only been tested with relatively simple objects.

But its inventors have big plans for touchable holograms in the future.

For example, it's been shown that in hospitals, there can be contamination between people due to objects that are touched communally. But if you can change the switches and such into a virtual switch, then you no longer have worry about touch contamination. This is one application that's quite easy to see.

Touchable holograms could be used for a wide variety of things. Everything from light switches to books with each appearing when needed, and then disappearing when not.

And holograms could replace the need for making new interfaces for technology, since they could be changed without having to make a new physical product."

Gee, I wonder if that's what the antichrist is going to do? You combine Milo technology with the touchable hologram technology and voila! You have to reach out and literally touch the hand of the antichrist's image and kiss it as a sign of your devotion or worship? And if you don't you're going to die! Either way, here's the point! For the first time in mankind's history, we've got the technology to pull it off!

But wait a second. What about the antichrist's death or "alleged" death. Do we have the technology to "fake" or "give the appearance" of something like that going on? Uh, yeah! Folks, believe it or not, for the first time in man's history, scientists believe they can actually now download a person's brain into a computer thus preserve theoretically it for life! And if you combine that technology with the advancements their making in robotics, you can come up with a pretty life-like image. Check it out!

"It's a conservative statement to say that by 2025 that we'll be able to look inside your brain, see everything that going on all the interneural connections, all the synaptic clefts, all the neural transmitter strings in creating a huge database and copying down every detail and then reconstitute that information in a neural computer of sufficient capacity and create basically a copy of the thinking process that takes place in your brain.

But that's one scenario but it's really an existence proof to show that we can tap the secrets of intelligence that exists in the human brain. Once we've scanned that information we can also understand and see how it's organized and improve on it. We can extend it, we can make the memory a thousand times bigger, we can make it faster, we can expand the perceptual capabilities.

To transfer your mind to a computer, this seems to be the ultimate dream of many scientists. To liberate us from our old body that is becoming obsolete in this technological world. We then would go on living as free spirits in cyberspace. So in a way I might wind up living as a short cut of my own artificial intelligence that will allow us to have machines with human minds. I'm hoping we can fit it on a CD-Rom that's 600 megabytes. I bet that's what we need to copy a person.

So it's a difficult time to predict what these new humans will be like. I think it's important to include the third component which is the virtual, along with the artificial and along with the flesh but how that mixture goes together in a co-operative verses a competitive way. It's hard to predict. It's very interesting. It's a great time to live in.

Reality and virtual reality are beginning to merge. We will be able to inject a certain number of nano-bots into our bodies where they will locate our brain cells and copy their functioning. With no effort we'll get a new copy of our consciousness that will then send a software copy to a computer where more copies can be made. Or our consciousness will be allowed to merge with others souls in software programs. Then we will be ready to leave this planet and start the exploration of the universe.”

Now, remind me again, why should I listen when people who warn me about the soon return of Jesus Christ? Oh, that's right! Because never before in the history of mankind have we had the technology to pull this kind of intimate detail off, the image of the antichrist or even his pseudo-death, until now! That's why you need to listen!

People, we had better wake up! What more does God have to do? He loves us! This is why He's given us the warning sign of Modern Technology to show us that the Tribulation is near and the 2nd Coming of Jesus Christ is rapidly approaching. And that's why Jesus Himself said: Luke 21:28 “When these things begin to take place, stand up and lift up your heads, because your redemption is drawing near.”

People of God, like it or not, we are headed for The Final Countdown. And so the point is this. If you're a Christian here today it's time to get busy! We've got to lay aside our differences and get busy working together saving souls! Amen? But if you're reading this today and you're not a Christian, then I beg you, please, heed the signs, heed the warnings, give your life to Jesus today because tomorrow may be too late!

Amen?

To find the way to God, to understand the truth of God's Word, and to received the gift of eternal life, begin by repentance and faith through a prayer like this:

“Dear God, I understand that I have broken Your Law and sinned against You. Please forgive my sins. Thank You that Jesus suffered on the cross in my place. I now place my trust in Him as My Savior and Lord. In Jesus' name I pray. Amen.”
